WHILE FLYING HIS KITE A SUDDEN STRONG WIND CARRIES IT OFF & CHIN CHIN-CHINAMAN AS WELL.

The Adventures of Chin Chin Chinaman.

CHIN CHIN was merrily flying his kite, all on a summer's day,
When a sudden gust of wind came and blew Chin and his kite away;
It carried him over houses, and over the
tops of trees,
And the wind blew his checked trousers—
oh, it was a windy breeze!

*THE ROYAL WASH LADY HAPPENS TO BE WASHING
THE EMPEROR'S SHIRTS & SOCKS JUST BENEATH & HIS COAT GIVING WAY CHIN-CHIN-CHINAMAN FALLS INTO THE ROYAL WASH TUB.*

Then the wind dropped, and Chin dropped, yes, very quickly dropped he, But he was not hurt, for he caught his shirt on the branch of an old plum tree ;

“That’s a very good job,” said Chin Chin— and the words were scarcely spoken, When a terrible crack, alas and alack! the plum tree branch was broken.

Again
Chin dropped
and he heard a splash, 'twas Chin
himself who made it;

He'd landed in the Emperor's
wash, tho' he tried hard to evade it.

Oh, wasn't the laundress angry! She said she'd box Chin's
ears,

But before she'd carried out her threat, Chin
quickly
disappears.

So away Chin ran, and the laundress ran, and made such a noise by shouting,

That she frightened poor little Sin Boo
Fan, who'd been taken for an outing.

Now Sin Boo Fan was Pee Chee's dog—Pee
Chee was the Emperor's daughter:

Princess Pee Chee cried out, "Save my dog, it has fallen in the water."

*SHE MAKES SUCH A NOISE
THAT THE PRINCESS' LITTLE DOG GETS FRIGHTENED & FALLS INTO THE RIVER.*

And just then Chin Chin running by,
hears Pee Chee's voice resounding,

He straight into the river dives
and saves
the dog
from drowning.

The Princess,
oh, so grateful was,
and,
although she was nearly crying,

She thanked
Chin Chin
and said,

“Come home, I'm sure your clothes want drying.”

So she took him up to her Palace home,
and when his clothes were dry,

She took him to tea, 'neath an Almond tree, in the gardens quite near by.

Then Sin Boo Fan sat up to beg: said Chin
Chin, “That's all right,

Princess Pee Chee has already thanked me,
so you ought to thank my Kite.”

*THE PRINCESS SOON CALMS DOWN THE WASH LADY & INSISTS ON TAKING CHIN-CHIN-CHINAMAN
HOME WITH HER TO THE PALACE TO BE DRIED & HAVE TEA WITH HER IN THE ROYAL GARDENS.*

THE EMPEROR WAS DELIGHTED.
