

BILLY BUTTON

BILLY BUTTON'S JOURNEY TO BRENTFORD.

A TAILOR lived at Bow, named Billy,
Who learned his trade in Piccadilly,
And having nought to do beside,
To Brentford he resolved to ride.

With shears instead of whip,
of course,

Up Billy sprang upon his horse ;

And there he sat with visage pale,

His head towards the horse's tail.

Feeling a Funny man across him,
The horse began to kick and toss him ;
And then, almost before he knew,
Off from his back poor Billy flew.

But see ! poor Billy's off once more ;

O, bless me ! hear him rave and roar :

If this goes on, you may depend

He'll never reach his journey's end.

A third time Billy makes a start,
And rides away with all his heart,
But soon some geese appeared in sight,
Which filled both man and horse with fright.

In vain he tried to stop his nag—

It galloped onward like a stag, Till Billy tumbled from its back,

And on his head received a crack.

Billy resolved to leave the
horse,

And ran away with all his force ;

But this the nag would not permit,

And so ran after him a bit.
