LADY TABITHA'S MORNING CONCERT.

LADY TABITHA'S CONCERT.

TWO Pussies found a happy home Beside the same bright fire;
And shared as much of food and fun
As Pussies could desire.

They chiefly led a country life,
Their home was near a wood:
But still, within an easy walk
A city's mansion stood.

Grimalkin was the name by which The elder Puss was known:
The younger one, as Tabitha, From kittenhood had grown.

The fur of one was light and grey,
The other dark and brown ;
And every day the brown and grey Went trotting up to town.

They liked to see the busy shops,
And through the streets to roam ;
But still, when they returned, they felt Contented with their home.

One day, when on a sunny bank
The brown Grimalkin sat, Dame Tabitha came up the path,
To have a friendly chat.

“Grimalkin dear,” she softly said, “My mind’s not quite at rest ; I’ll tell you all, then, will you, please Advise me for the best ?

“Well, yesterday we took a walk, Dame Tortoiseshell and I,

And when we felt fatigued, we sat
Upon a bank close by.

“And there, to while away
the time,
We sang a new duet; I think you know the song, 'tis called—‘Sweet Pussy don't forget!’

“ Our voices are sopranos, both,
But still, it sounded well :
Dame Tortoiseshell sings charmingly,
Her voice is like a bell.

“ We'd finished when a squeaky voice Rang shrilly through the wood,
And cried, in mocking tones, ‘ Hurrah !
Good, Pussies, very good !’

“ We looked around surprised and vexed,
And near us on a twig,
We saw an ugly, spotted Thrush ;
A little vulgar prig !

“ Dame Tortoiseshell, I think might take The sweetly-sounding flute ;

Dear Manx could play the tambourine,
And you might choose the lute.”

And so the cats and birds agreed :

And, one bright summer day,

Towards the sunny garden square, Grimalkin led the way.

And as he walked in solemn state,
He slowly turned his head Towards the friends who followed near,
And, looking at them, said :

'I hope, my friends,
you'll not forget To close your velvet paws ;

Remembering that no guest to-night

Must feel your sharpened claws.

"We meet for music and for song :
Let friends and foes combine To bury all their feuds and wrongs,
For Bach and Rubenstein."

So peace reigned in the garden square,
The birds sang well in tune ;
And happily the hours rang out,
Like bells in merry June.

The birds admired the simple songs,
The cats the classic lore ;
And after each and every piece,
They cried, "Encore! encore!"

At last, the western sky was gold,
The evening shades drew nigh ;
And birds and pussies all agreed
'Twas time to say,
" Good-bye."

Then all arose with one accord,
To sing " God save the Queen !"

And when they parted, each one said How happy they had been.

I know there are some little things, Who mostly live indoors,

And trot about the busy world On twos instead of fours.

Who would not do so much amiss,
When winter time comes round,
And days are dark with snow and showers,
And jokes and fun abound ;

If they would, like the birds and cats,
Forget their fancied wrongs,
And spend their happy holidays
In merriment and songs;

How many happy firesides In winter time there'd be,
If little folks with varied tastes Would never disagree.

Adieu, my little friends, I've told You all I have to tell.
And now, I hope you'll say with me—
"Dame Tabitha, farewell!"

"Real talent we witness in these Surprise Picture Books, in which, by merely turning down the corners, the scenes and characters become entirely changed."—Christian World.

"Each picture forms dozens of tableaux at the pleasure of the owner. A very amusing present to all people."—Pictorial World.

"These are the most original Books for children that have ever emanated from the press, and we cordially commend them. The novelty consists in the pictures being capable of making a large number of changes by simply turning down or lifting up one corner. There are no complications and not anything that can get out of order."—Publishers' Circular.

"The artists and designers of these Surprise Picture Books deserve the thanks of all parents. The Picture-changes to the tales are certainly most surprising, amusing and ingenious, and our young folks will be delighted at being able to change a scene and make picture out of picture at will."—
