"Christmas comes but once a year.
And when it comes it hingos goor cheer."

Aye, and a right good time it is, too. Father, mother, aunts, uncles, grandlather and grandmother, and children galore, with happy, beaming faces, all seem intent on doing justice to the huge sirloin of good old English roast beef, which, flanked with bottles of goodall's yorkshire relish, makes so grand a display on the groaning table.
A wise head makes a still tongue. Quite so, so far as tittletittle is concerned; hut we maintain that by telling far and near the virtues of goodall's custard powder, we are doing a gcod and wise action.
A hit, a very palpable hit, quoth Osric, and the same might truthfully be said (and in fact is being said every day) of goodall's world-renowned household specialities.
Throw physic to the dogs: I'll none of it, cried the blustering Macbeth. And so, though in a different sense, say we; for, with goodall's quinine wine to our hand, we can look the doctor squarely in the face, and tell him his potions are unneeded.
Othello's occupation's gone. So spoke the swarthy Moor; and so mightsay, could they but speak, the denizens of our poultry yards, on beholding the wondrous effects of goodall's egg powder.
They laugh that win, and the proprietors of goodall's yorkshire relish might well be excused if they indulged in a peal of Jubilant laughter at the marvellous success which their far-famed specialities havo won.
Who steals my purse steals trash; 80 spoke that cunning knave, lago. But he who stealeth my stock of goodall's baking powder inflicteth upon me a most dire disaster.
Tell truth and shame the devil, said firy Hotspur. And so we will: affirming, without fear of denial, that goodall's brunswick black is the best to be had for money.

A rotten case abides no handling, cried Westmorland, a sentiment we fully endorse; but we have a good case indeed when we have to speak of goodall's baking powder, which stands unrivalled.

Frmiliar to his mouth as household words. So prophesiet King Henry the Fifth should be the names of himself and his gallant followers. And so are, and shall be, in every English home, the names of goodall's far-famed specialities.
Good counsellors lack ne clients. So says the clown in Measuri for Measure, and a right sensible remark too: and we are sure, in advising our readers to use none other than goodall': custard poweler, that we are giving them the very best of good counsel.

Virtue is its own Reward, and so the housewife who is always provided with a sapply of goodall's household specialities will reap her reward in the praises of her quests.
You sannot judge a horse by its harness, but you can judge of goodall's egg powder by its magniticent results.
You cannot catch old birds with chaff any more than you can make good soup without goodall's yorkshire relish.
Years know more than books, and many years' trial has proved without a doubt that goodall's yorkshire relish is unrival!ed.
Women, wine, and horses are ware men are often deceived in, but they will never be taken in by using goodall's gingerbeer powder, which is a right good irticle.
When the old dog barks, he gives counsel, and the advice of older men than we is to use goodall's quinine wine at meal times. It is a splendid tonic.
Self praise in no recommendation, but when, as in the case of goodall's househeld specialities, the whole world praises them, there can be no doubt as to their excellence.
Everything is good in its season, and goodall's yorkshire relish is always seasonable.
A friend in need is a friend indeed, and when everything else fails goodall's yorkshire relish will be up to the mark.
All is not gold that glitters, but no one will deny that groodall's quinine wine is incomparably the best tonic known.
As you make your bed so you must lie on it, and unless you use goodall's baking powder, you may rue the consequences. Count not your chickens before they are hatched. A very sensible proverb; but gondall's egg powder bids fair to obviate the necessity of having either eggs or chickens.
Delays are dangernus, therefore lose no time in obtaining a supply ot gomall s yorkshire relish, if you wish to have your soups and steaks palatable.
Good counsel breaks no man's head, and our counsel is, don't fail to use goodall's brunswick black, if you wish your stoves o luok bright.
He is rich who is contented, and what more can a man want than a prime rump steak seasoned with goodall's yorkshire relish.
All's well that ends well, and a household that kpeps a stock of goodall's world-renowned specialities will never go wrong in its culinary department.
Hung ${ }^{\circ}$ is the best sance, some people say; but I prefe $P_{r}$ goodall's yorkshre relish.
"Ring out the old; ring in the new; Ring out the false; ring in the true."
