

CINDERELLA
or The Little Glass Slipper.
 as Performed at the Theatre Royal,
DURHAM LANE.
 1794

A Marchioness sought in the Papilion the Whose heart great Venus could the world beguile Displays as large which should the highest While Cupid wounds him with his piercing dart
Down up

*Quarrelled from great Venus does appear
 A nymph who bids Cinderella not to fear,
 As she is first from hate to fit her face,
 And will bear off her Saviour's coach.*
Down up

*Th' unfeeling father in admiration drest,
 While the young Prince checks her with his breast
 To stop with him the many circles round,
 Excepted that the fair one he has found,*
Down up

*The generous father did the tale relate
 But they and many might have fled away
 For Cinderella does the slipper fit,
 And there another which does matches it,*
Down up it does

Then to the ethereal regions they arise,
In perfect slumber of their royal prize,
Who to Diana chaste his homage paid,
And now's deep slumber with the atmosphere

This pungent quick a carriage is a train,
And twice three hours from their slippers rise,
They rush to sleep and then forward soon
Shall hasten in a heap of green.

Time flies unheeded till the curtain'd hour,
Begins to strike midnight from their place down,
As he as if he started from a trance,
Like lightning flies the Prince departs the dance

The Temple or Faint's R.

One way to find her out he thinks pursue,
That should be that night's splendid dance,
Among the ladies who will there resort,
He'll for the fair by whom his heart is caught

But on the midnight hour the dance is o'er,
And to your home quickly you'll get o'er,
He then had for his splendor quickly he
And gave to be behold in rage and misery

That sleep is better now slippers on the ground,
Which by the morning Prince is quickly found,
Who now address the foot of any fair,
Which fits the slippers shall his kingdom share

The morning's lost in Venus' Temple track,
The Prince, excepted with his dancing hatch,
Whisked fingers her fingers' cruelty
And hopes they'll live together happily