

A Teddy-Bear tale

DIAMOND DYES

A Teddy-Bear tale

Far away in the Isle of The Welcoming Smile,
By the shores of the fair Square Deal,
Live the gay Teddy Bears, who have trials and cares
As this truthful tale will reveal.

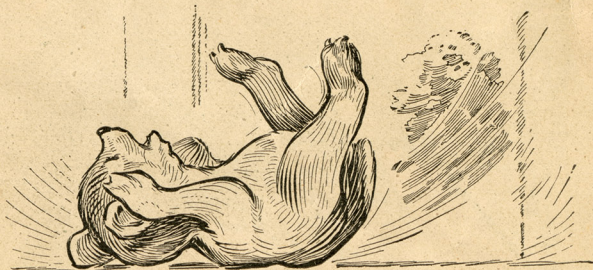

Now the Teddy Bears, wee, One, Two, Five, Six and Three,
Got up early one bright Spring day.
Ice was out of the brooks, so they took lines and hooks,
And they quietly ran away.

Poor young Teddy Bear Four gave a howl and a roar,
When he found he was left behind,
But he stifled it quick, as the thought of the stick,
That his father used, came to mind.

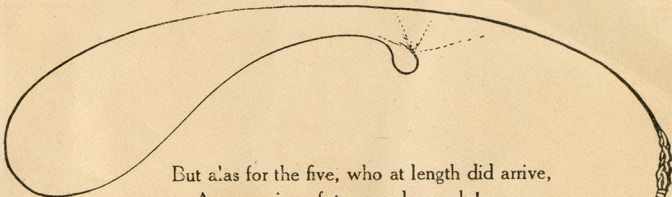

And he said, " I won't cry,—there's a good reason why,—
I will merely express the wish
To be somewhere around when my brothers are found,
For they'll catch something more than fish ! "

So good Teddy Bear Four, he did each brother's chore,
While his father looked up the rest ;
And the mother Bear said, as she patted his head,
That she had always loved him best.

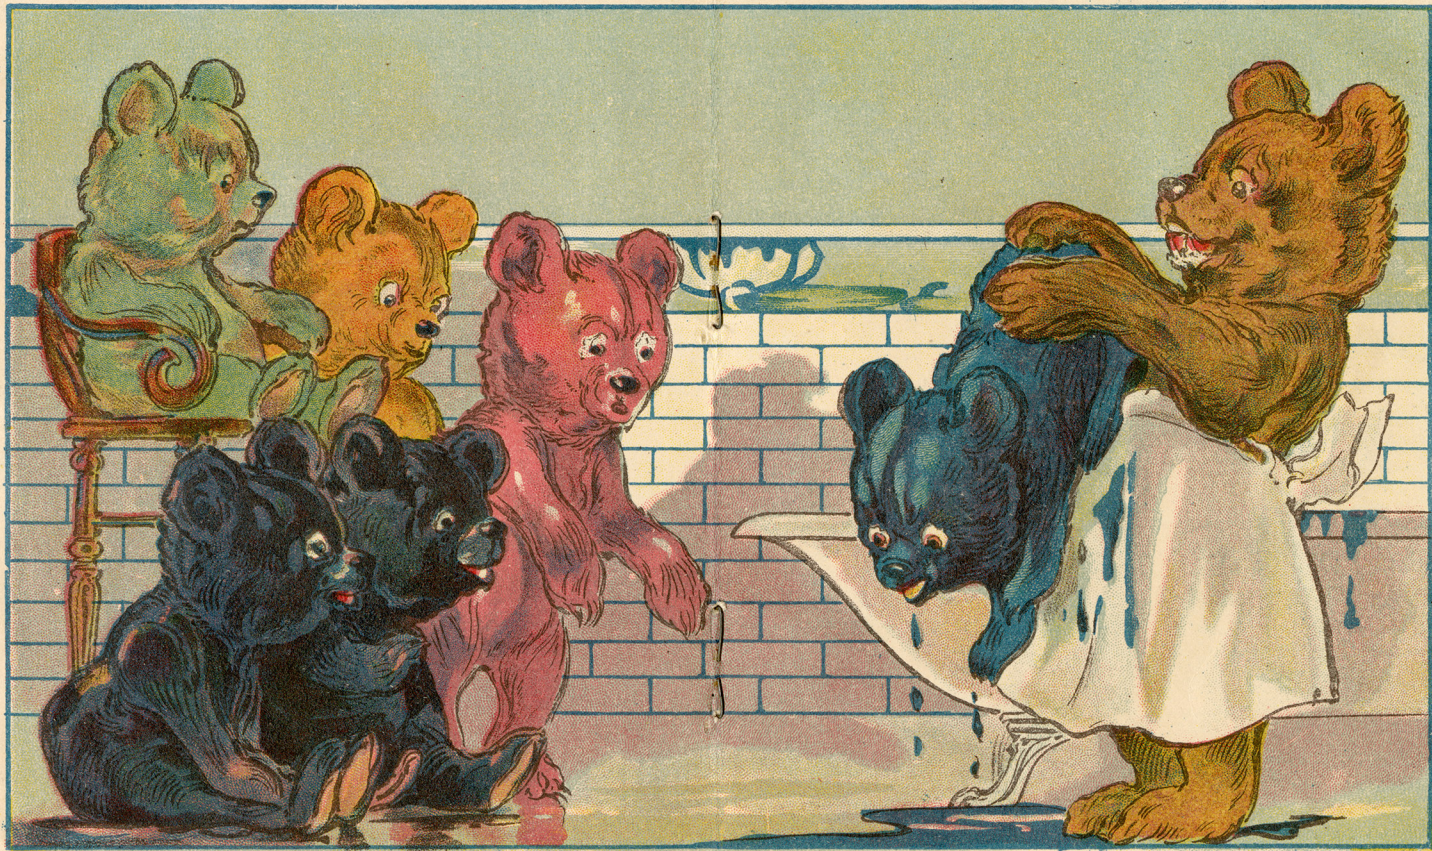

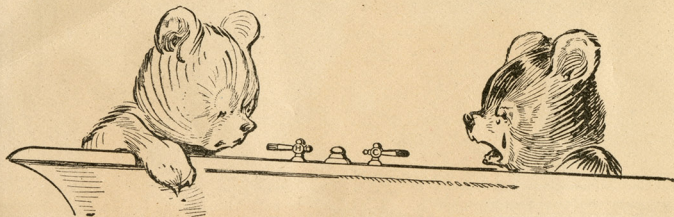

But a'as for the five, who at length did arrive,
A procession of tears and squeals!
Mud and water they dripped, and the Big stick it nipped
At their shivering, flying heels.

And the Mother Bear knew what was proper to do,
For she spanked them and gave them squills ;
Then, for each of the lot, fixed a bath good and hot,
Which would cleanse them and check their chills.

But young Teddy Bear Four had thought up something more,
Which would add to their glad surprise ;
And in each steaming tub, beside each weeping cub,
Dropped a package of DIAMOND DYES !

Words are feeble to tell of the change that befell
All those wee Teddy Bears, so brown !
Mother Bear screamed in fright, at the wonderful sight,
When she came in to wipe them down.

Teddy Bears Five and Six were as black as lamp wicks,—
Teddy Two was dyed green you know ;
Teddy Three he was dyed, both his hair and his hide,
To a beautiful orange glow.

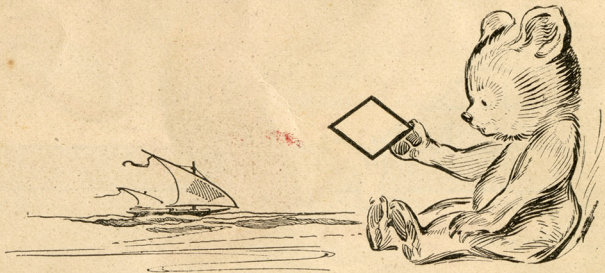

DIAMOND  DYES

Teddy One was rose-pink—And, as quick as a wink,
Mother Bear saw the whole trick through.
So she mixed up some more and she dipped Teddy Four,
And he came out a deep, dark blue!

As for Big Father Bear, he was heard to declare,
"I'm de-e-lighted! Mix some for me!"
And he dyed himself red, so to show, as he said,
Just how brilliant a bear could be.
