WOODSTOCK, 1792-1901

ONE hundred years ago Woodstock's position on the map of Canada was described as "the westerly portion of the county of York, bounded on the north by the river La Tranch, and opposite the township of Oxford," and was called "The Town Plot."

It was not till 1833, upon the advent of Capt. Drew and Major Barwick, that indications were forthcoming pointing to even village proportions for what, in a few days, will appear as the City of Woodstock.

Capt. Drew was followed by Rear Admiral Vansittart, and by that plethora of cultured English gentlemen, whose wealth and influence established Woodstock as dominating in an especial degree the character of this western portion of country.

In the affairs of '37-'38 the loyalty and courage of the class alluded to was conspicuous. Capt. Drew, Capt. Graham—both ex-members of England's naval force—with H. C. Barwick and Wm. Light, were engaged in the destruction of the piratical steamer, "Caroline," a Yankee craft loaned by the people of Buffalo to convey munitions of war, men and supplies to the patriot army under W. L. McKenzie on Navy Island.

These evidences of loyalty and courage on the part of the people of Woodstock were graciously recognized by the British Government.

In 1852, Woodstock received incorporation, erected that noticeable building as a Town Hall and market place, and for years our local "fleshers," as they were called in Scotland, had their places of business where now the wisdom of the town employs the weary hours in Legislation akin to the proposition of the late "Humanity" Martin, of the British House of Commons, whose aim was to have a quart bottle contain a quart of fluid. Of late Woodstock has evinced a disposition toward improvement; streets are being graded and macadamized; and this work is effectually accomplished through the aid of the steam roller; and the main thoroughfares are kept dust-free through the efficient service of a watering appliance.

Not much can be said for our Public Library; nor can we boast of attractive and popular agencies for the culture and recreation of our young people. With little expense aquatic sports could be had, but the water supply is not the property of a member of council; and our race-course is a thing of the past—and perhaps just as well so, for of late the pernicious evil of gambling clings to the race-track.

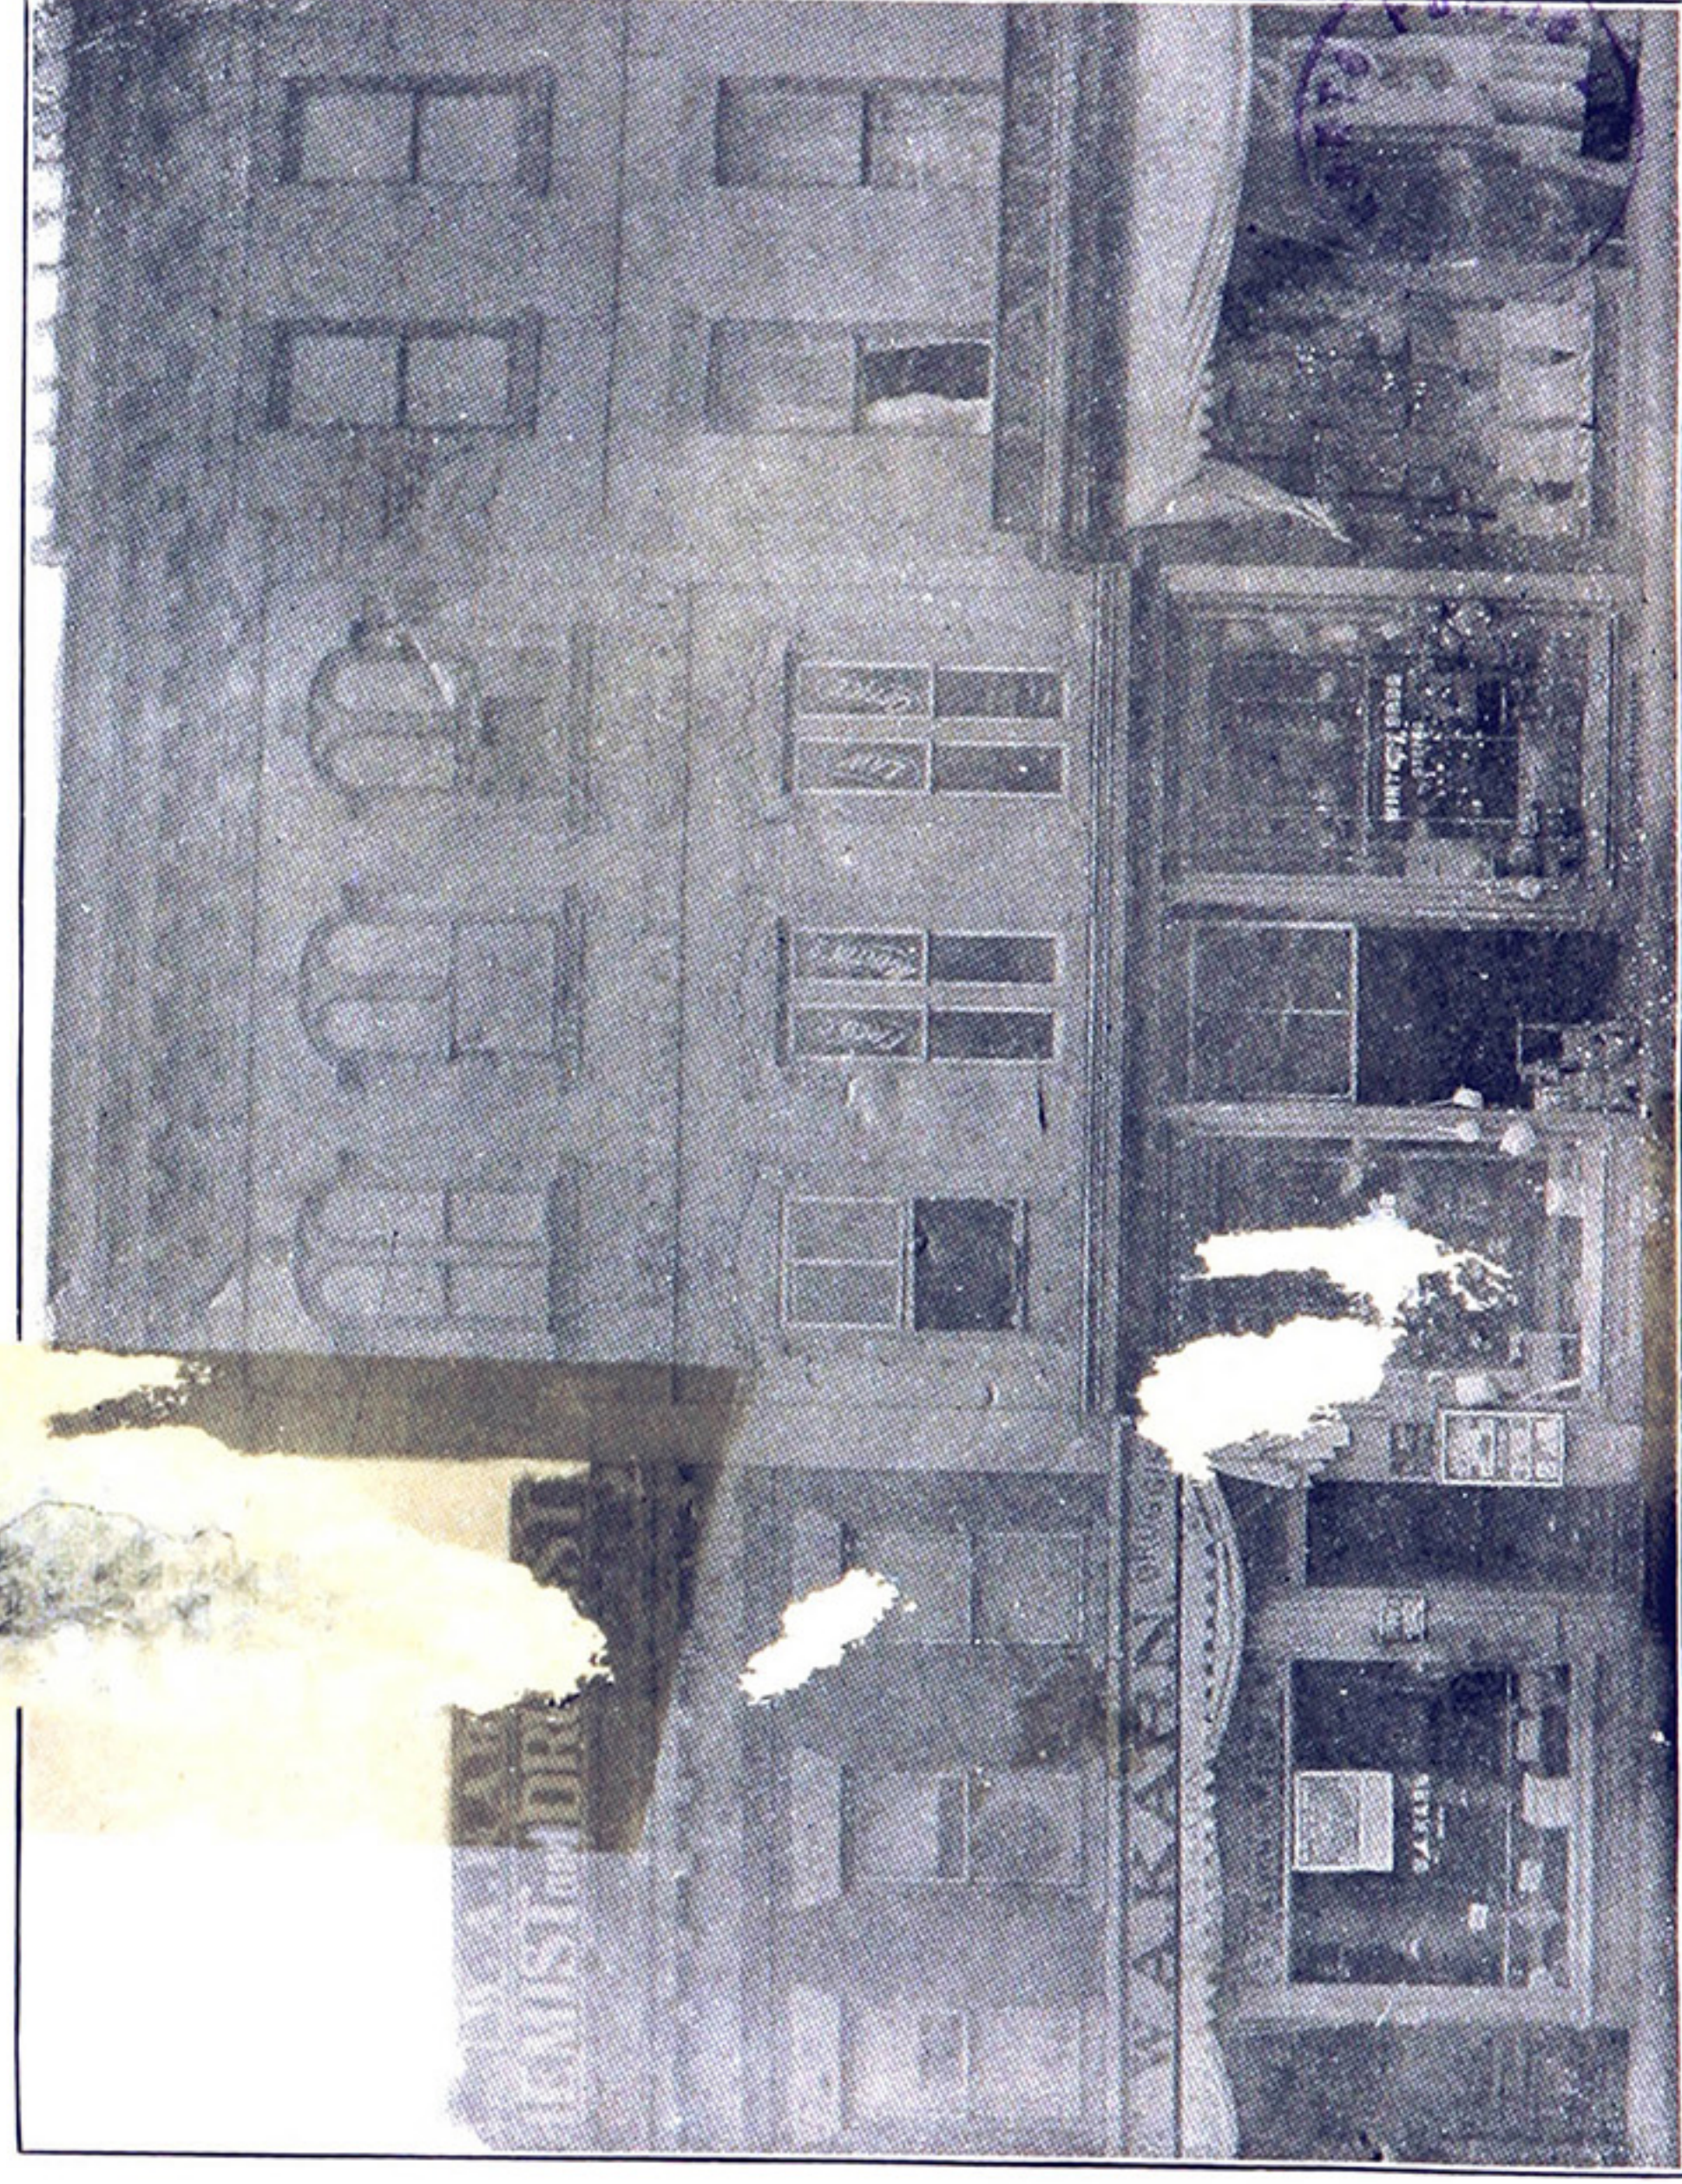

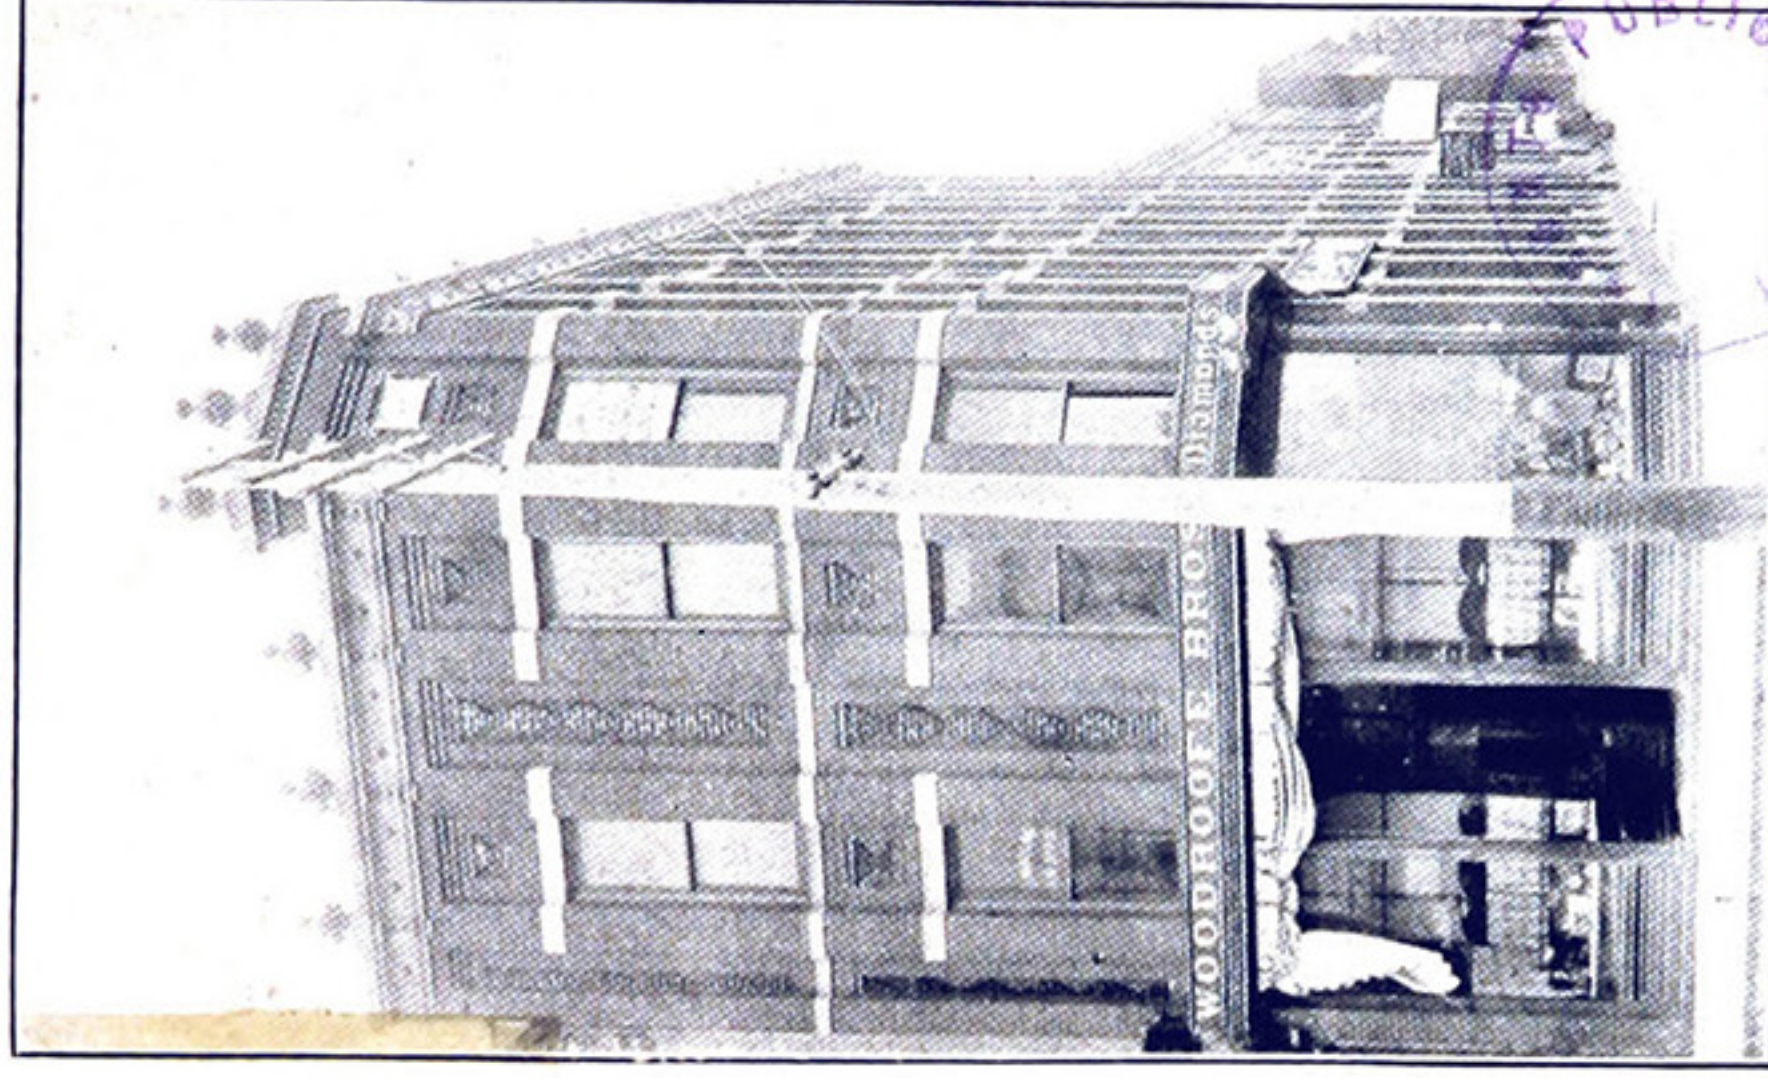

The city is admirably lighted by gas and electric light, and all our streets are beautified with the rich foliage of our own dear maple; and the electric cars bring us in close contact with neighboring villages.

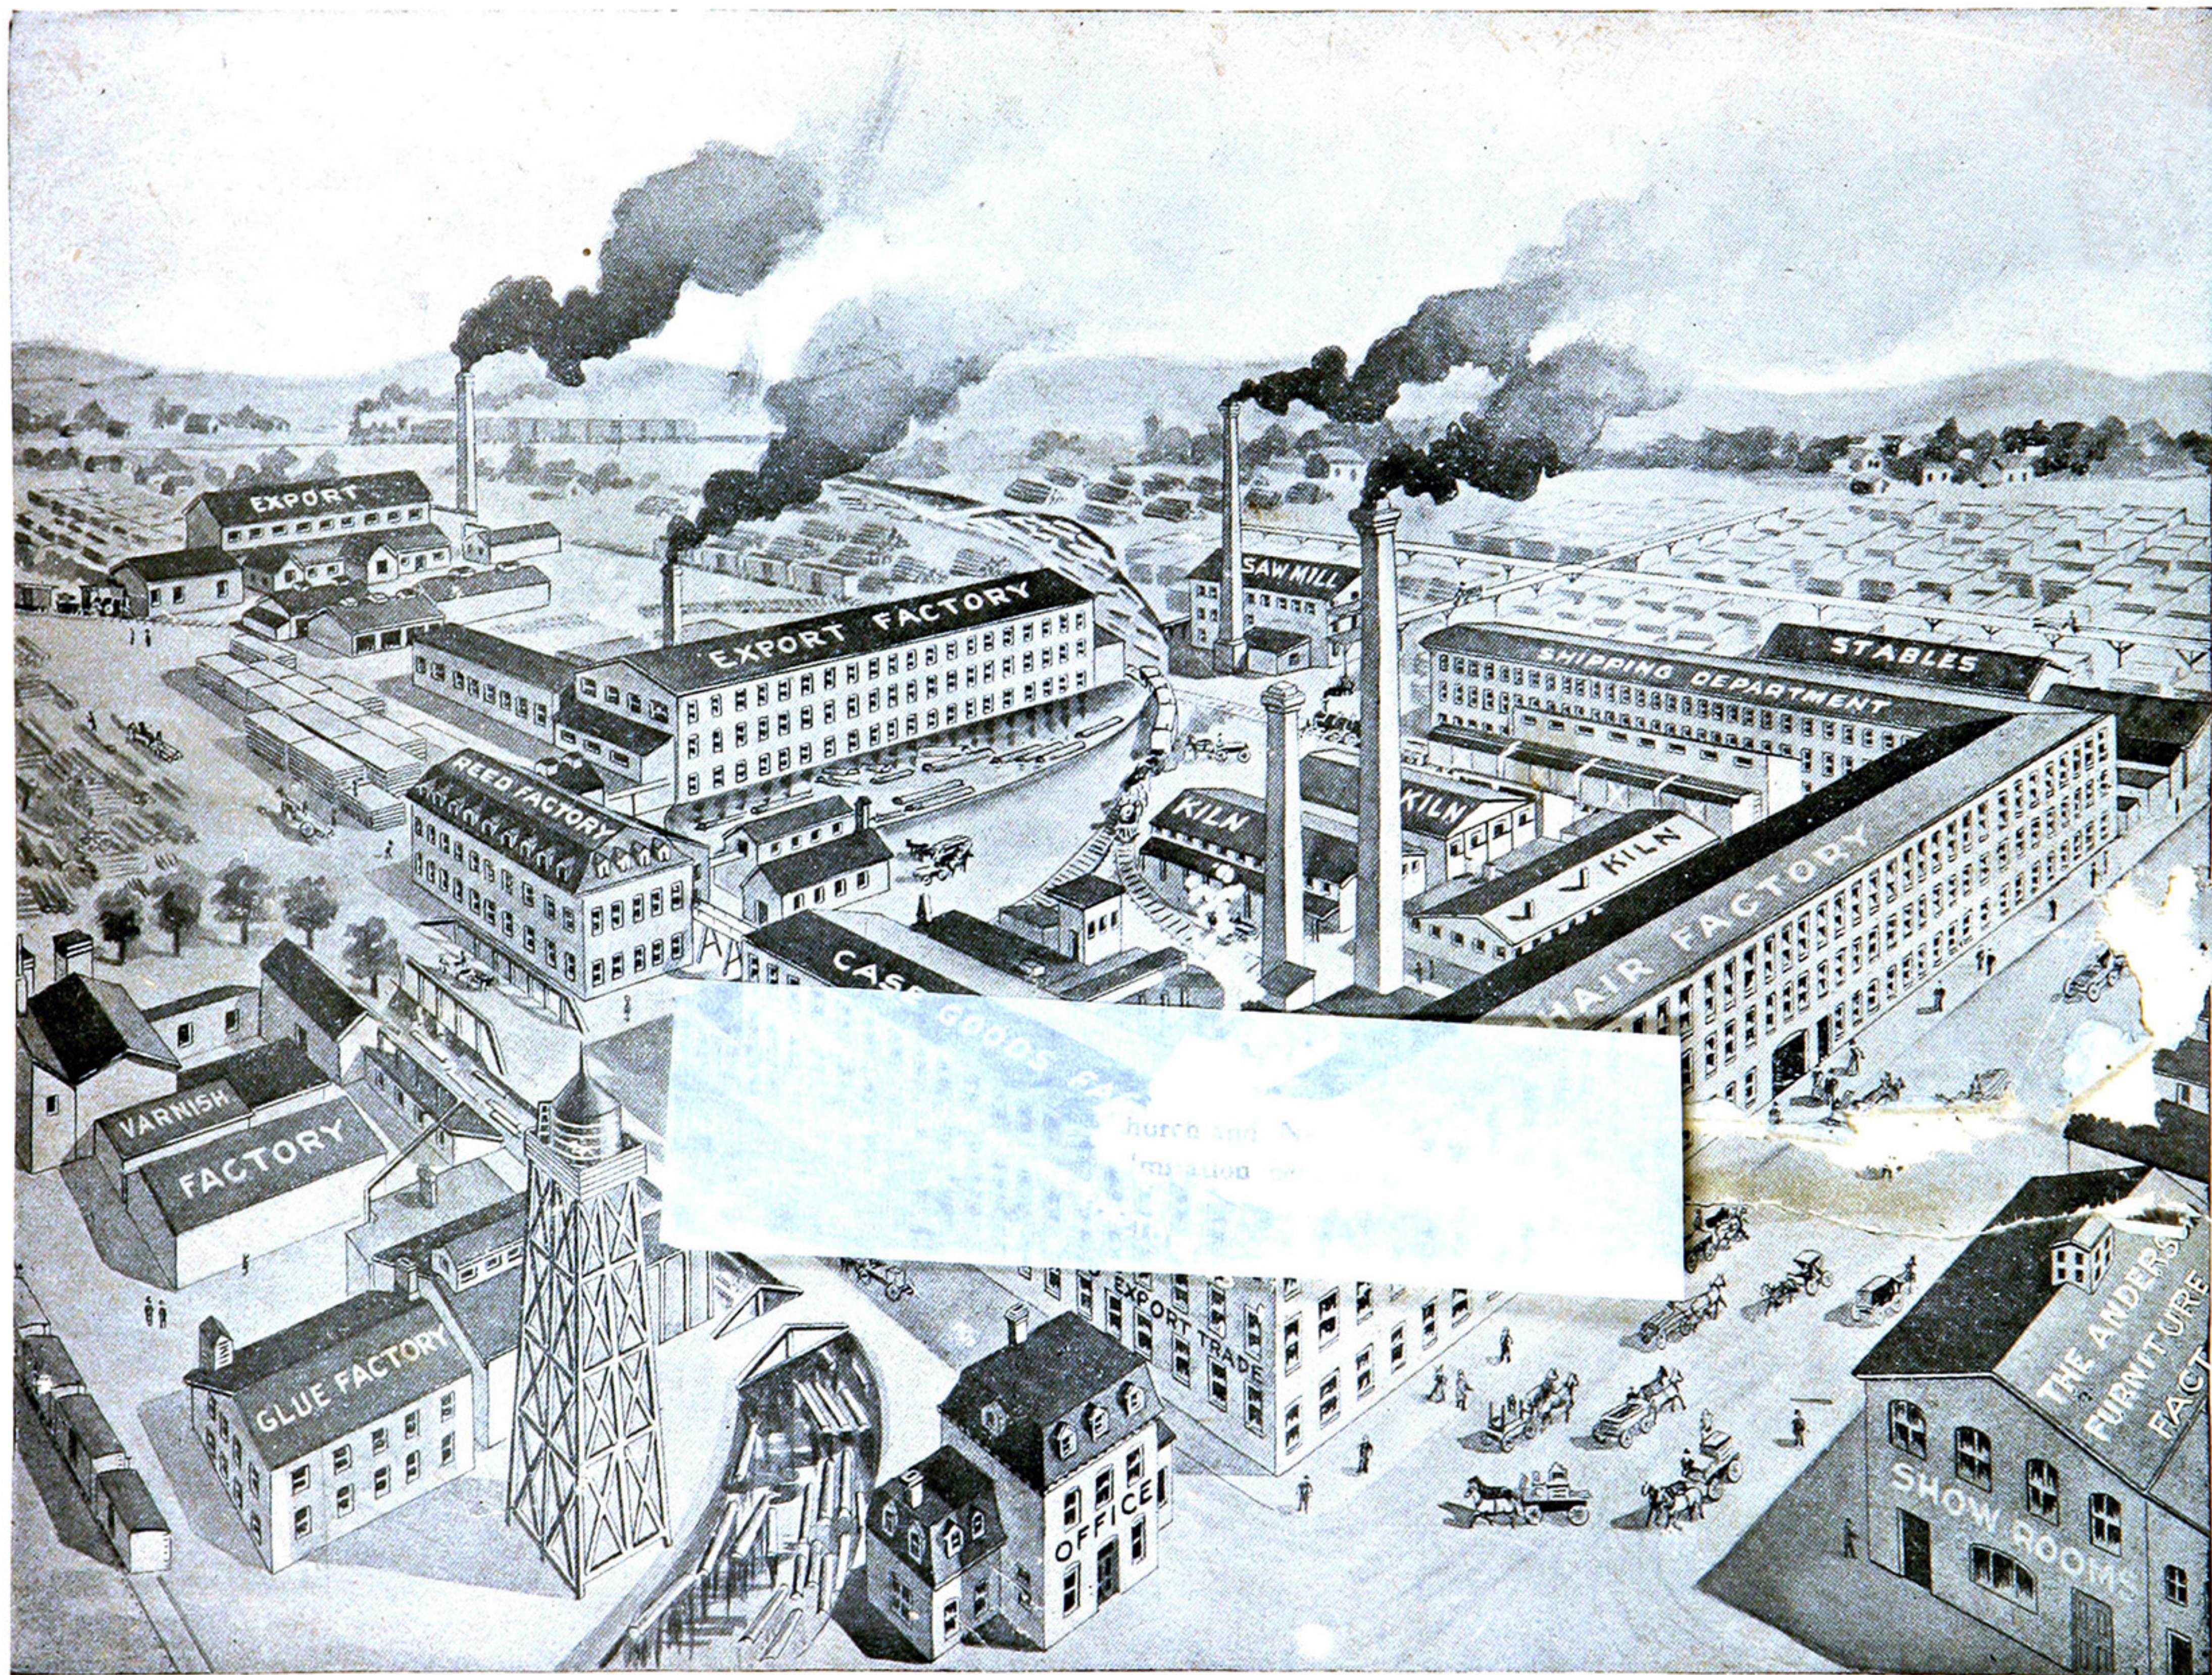

Of public buildings Woodstock can point with pride to two—the Court House and the intended new public buildings on the corner of Reeve and Dundas streets.

Of places of public worship we have an ample supply. New Knox Church and New St. Paul's are pretentious structures; and the two Methodist churches would not disgrace any of our cities, while Old St. Paul's challenges admiration because of its quaint appearance and the associations that pertain in a marked degree to it and the grounds attached.

This is not the place for reference to the ability and popularity of our local clergy. This much may be advanced, viz., since the days of the late Rev. Wm. Bettridge, the people of Woodstock, in all the places of worship, have enjoyed the spiritual and social advantages of distinguished scholars and lovable gentlemen.

The industrial development and enterprise of Woodstock could not be better exemplified than by this pictorial souvenir of the city inauguration, and the publication of it by "The Times."
