

AND HER

COMICAL CATS.

LONDON:

DEAN AND SON, THREADNEEDLE-STREET.

PRICE THREE-PENCE

DAME TROT,

AND

HER COMICAL CATS.

LONDON:

THOS. DEAN & SON, THREADNEEDLE-STREET.

Dame Trot and her cottage, above you view,

And there is her seat, and her magpie, too;

But the comical Dame was nothing less

Than the cats' mag-ni-fi-cent governess.

But the cats were deaf whenever she spoke,

They leapt on the shelves, and her china broke;

They lapped up her milk, and laughed at her rule,

So she sent them off to a neighbouring school.

When she called, she addressed them with "How d'ye do;" The cats politely replied, "Mew, Mew."

A large silk handkerchief lay on their knees,

And they hemmed away as busy as bees.

She was pleased, and invited them home to dine

Off a dish of fish, with gooseberry wine;

And the toast she gave, as they gobbled the sprats,

Was, "Health and long life to my comical cats."

But a very respectable grey-whiskered cat,

In the midst of the feast smelt a mouse or a rat;

So, without asking leave, to the garden she ran,

And received a fat mouse from the hands of the man.

Said a knowing old mouse, "Now the cats are away,

As the old saying has it, the mouse may play;"

But a cat and her kitten crept slily round,

And carried poor mousey away at a bound.

Farmer Hodge, a kind neighbour, was troubled with mice,

Says the dame, "We will clear them away in a trice:"

So she sent all the cats once a day to his house,

And at night they returned, each bearing a mouse.

When Hodge and his waggon Dame Trot espied,

She determined on giving her cats a ride;

So the ladies were placed in the waggon, of course,

While the gentlemen cats mounted each his own horse.

The farmer was pleased that the mice were all gone;

Said he, "My fine cats, for the service you've done,

Here, take home this ham,—I will send you some game;

And give my respects to your worthy old Dame."

DEAN AND SON, PRINTERS, THREADNEEDLE-STREET.

Little Jane and her Mother.

Young Nibble, the Discontented Mouse.
Barnaby Bray, the Wonderful Neddy.
Sam Playful, or a Cure for Dull Spirits.
Lady Duck and Doctor Drake.
Mrs. Figgs's Grand Ball.
Pastimes and Employments for young Folks.
Little John and his Sisters.
The Wonderful Plum Pie.
Dame Trot, and her Comical Cats.
A Peep at the World.
Peter's Enquiries after Knowledge.
Goody Homespun and her Seven Cats.

POPULAR TOY BOOKS.

History of A, Apple Pie.
The House that Jack Built.
The Cradle Hymn.
Gaping Wide-mouthed Waddling Frog.

