

THE HISTORY OF JACK & JILL.

DEVONPORT:

Samuel and John Keys.

Jack and Jill went up the hill,
Expecting no disaster ;
But Jack he tumbled neck and crop :
Jill crack'd her sides with laughter.

Jack went home, and did complain
Unto Dame Jill, her mother,
Who said she was a naughty girl,
A cake she gave the other.

Dame Jill she had a huge big pig ;

Said Jack to Jill one day,

“ Let’s let the pig out of the sty,

And with it we can play.”

Now Jill she helps Jack on the pig,

And laugh'd to see the fun ;
The pig not liking of the weight,
Away with Jack he run.

Until he came unto a ditch,
Which was poor pig's desire ;—

He kick'd, he pranc'd, at last he threw Poor Jack into the mire.

Jill help'd him out, but did not laugh,
For she was sore afraid

That her poor brother might be hurt,

And thus to him she said :

“ There is a pump behind the house :

If you will journey there,
I'll pump with all my might
indeed,

Until from mud you're clear.”

But as she pump'd Dame Jill came out,

To see what was the matter ;
She took a whip and beat them
both,

For playing with the water.

For she could never guess the rig
Which Jack and Jill had play'd,
Until herself was by the pig
Into the horse-pond laid.

Then they were both oblig'd to help

Dame Jill out of the pond,
For though she often did them
beat,

Of her they were both fond.

From wet to dry she chang'd her clothes,

And looked round about.

Then Jack and Jill they did explain

How piggy he got out.

Forgiveness of the Dame they had ;

For they'd all met disaster ;
And with the tale the village rang,
The village rang with laughter.
